U.S. House of Representatives
Room H-204, The Capitol

Dear Speaker Pelosi and Leader McCarthy,

Throughout the summer and into the fall as Congress discussed the size and scope of additional pandemic relief, we appreciated that every legislative proposal, from both parties and in both chambers, included funding for students and higher education institutions. The HEROES Act, which passed your chamber in May, contained $37 billion in additional support, and other legislation has proposed as much as $132 billion.

As our country's colleges and universities enter the new academic year, it has become increasingly clear that earlier estimates of both the financial impact of the COVID-19 pandemic and the costs associated with resuming classes were far lower than what institutions and students are now experiencing. Many campuses have opened and remain open successfully. Others have been forced to close temporarily before reopening, and still others have shifted to fully remote instruction. Regardless of an institution's status, costs have rapidly multiplied as colleges and universities adapt to the particular circumstances they're facing.

Previously, our associations calculated that the financial impact of the pandemic on students and institutions would total at least $120 billion. Now, roughly one month into the fall semester, our members are reporting that their revenue losses and new costs have already greatly exceeded this amount, especially in areas such as testing, contact tracing, quarantine, treatment, and learning technology. For their part, many of our students and their families are struggling with reduced incomes and job losses, resulting in the need for billions of dollars in increased student aid.

Given this new information, we write to request that any supplemental funding bill include at least $120 billion for higher education in order to partially mitigate the challenges that students and institutions are facing. While we understand that any supplemental spending bill must balance many important needs, support for colleges and universities addresses all of the core problems our country is facing. Our institutions employ nearly 4 million faculty and staff. College campuses are the economic hubs of their regions, generating an estimated $650 billion in revenues annually, along with tens of billions of dollars more in associated economic activity. Our schools train the doctors, nurses, and other frontline workers needed to address this unprecedented health crisis, and perform the research necessary to produce the urgently needed vaccines and treatments. Finally, our schools educate 26 million students, preparing them to compete and succeed in an increasingly difficult economy, and fueling the path towards a recovery.

We appreciate the efforts Congress has undertaken to address the ongoing crisis facing students and institutions. We look forward to working with you and your members to ensure that any COVID-19 supplemental bill provides sufficient resources.

Sincerely,

Ted Mitchell
President
