NASFAA Resources and Advocacy in the Time of COVID-19

June 2020

In the final Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security (CARES) Act bill, passed on March 27, 2020, NASFAA saw many of its congressional requests related to flexibilities and waivers and relief opportunities for student loan borrowers realized.

NASFAA has been in regular communication with the Department of Education throughout the implementation process to ask questions and seek clarification on behalf of our members.

Considered experts on the topic, NASFAA staff have been called on by national and local newspapers as well as higher education-specific publications to provide information on how financial aid has been affected by coronavirus, and to give opinions on ED's rollout of guidance.

NASFAA's communications team, in conjunction with the Policy and TRA teams has produced an extraordinary number of articles for Today's News, to keep members informed of all student financial aid-related news.

The National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators (NASFAA) is a nonprofit membership organization that represents more than 28,000 financial aid professionals at nearly 3,000 colleges, universities, and career schools across the country. NASFAA member institutions serve nine out of every 10 undergraduates in the United States. Based in Washington, D.C., NASFAA is the only national association with a primary focus on student aid legislation, regulatory analysis, and training for financial aid administrators. For more information, visit www.nasfaa.org.

NASFAA has been a recognized member of the higher education community during the pandemic and has been asked by multiple organizations to create, present, or participate in webinars or learning sessions as a trusted source of knowledge.

In response to the complexity surrounding CARES Act implementation, NASFAA produced biweekly webinars to help educate our members on the newest guidance.

As information and new guidance continued to be published about the use of CARES Act funds and the flexibilities and waivers provided by ED and Congress, NASFAA created a calendar timeline that tracks all the changes to guidance, as well as a one-stop shop resource page with a FAQ section.

The Department of Education

Congress

The Department of Education

Community Work

Resources

Congress

Articles & Interviews

Member Media

In the final Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security (CARES) Act bill, passed on March 27, 2020, NASFAA saw many of its congressional requests related to flexibilities and waivers and relief opportunities for student loan borrowers realized.

In the final Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security (CARES) Act bill, passed on March 27, 2020, NASFAA saw many of its congressional requests related to flexibilities and waivers and relief opportunities for student loan borrowers realized.

As information and new guidance continued to be published about the use of CARES Act funds and the flexibilities and waivers provided by ED and Congress, NASFAA created a calendar timeline that tracks all the changes to guidance, as well as a one-stop shop resource page with a FAQ section.

The National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators (NASFAA) is a nonprofit membership organization that represents more than 28,000 financial aid professionals at nearly 3,000 colleges, universities, and career schools across the country. NASFAA member institutions serve nine out of every 10 undergraduates in the United States. Based in Washington, D.C., NASFAA is the only national association with a primary focus on student aid legislation, regulatory analysis, and training for financial aid administrators. For more information, visit www.nasfaa.org.

NASFAA has been in regular communication with the Department of Education throughout the implementation process to ask questions and seek clarification on behalf of our members.

Considered experts on the topic, NASFAA staff have been called on by national and local newspapers as well as higher education-specific publications to provide information on how financial aid has been affected by coronavirus, and to give opinions on ED's rollout of guidance.

NASFAA's communications team, in conjunction with the Policy and TRA teams has produced an extraordinary number of articles for Today's News, to keep members informed of all student financial aid-related news.

In response to the complexity surrounding CARES Act implementation, NASFAA produced biweekly webinars to help educate our members on the newest guidance.

As information and new guidance continued to be published about the use of CARES Act funds and the flexibilities and waivers provided by ED and Congress, NASFAA created a calendar timeline that tracks all the changes to guidance, as well as a one-stop shop resource page with a FAQ section.

The National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators (NASFAA) is a nonprofit membership organization that represents more than 28,000 financial aid professionals at nearly 3,000 colleges, universities, and career schools across the country. NASFAA member institutions serve nine out of every 10 undergraduates in the United States. Based in Washington, D.C., NASFAA is the only national association with a primary focus on student aid legislation, regulatory analysis, and training for financial aid administrators. For more information, visit www.nasfaa.org.

NASFAA has been in regular communication with the Department of Education throughout the implementation process to ask questions and seek clarification on behalf of our members.

Considered experts on the topic, NASFAA staff have been called on by national and local newspapers as well as higher education-specific publications to provide information on how financial aid has been affected by coronavirus, and to give opinions on ED's rollout of guidance.

NASFAA's communications team, in conjunction with the Policy and TRA teams has produced an extraordinary number of articles for Today's News, to keep members informed of all student financial aid-related news.

In response to the complexity surrounding CARES Act implementation, NASFAA produced biweekly webinars to help educate our members on the newest guidance.

As information and new guidance continued to be published about the use of CARES Act funds and the flexibilities and waivers provided by ED and Congress, NASFAA created a calendar timeline that tracks all the changes to guidance, as well as a one-stop shop resource page with a FAQ section.

The National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators (NASFAA) is a nonprofit membership organization that represents more than 28,000 financial aid professionals at nearly 3,000 colleges, universities, and career schools across the country. NASFAA member institutions serve nine out of every 10 undergraduates in the United States. Based in Washington, D.C., NASFAA is the only national association with a primary focus on student aid legislation, regulatory analysis, and training for financial aid administrators. For more information, visit www.nasfaa.org.

NASFAA has been in regular communication with the Department of Education throughout the implementation process to ask questions and seek clarification on behalf of our members.

Considered experts on the topic, NASFAA staff have been called on by national and local newspapers as well as higher education-specific publications to provide information on how financial aid has been affected by coronavirus, and to give opinions on ED's rollout of guidance.

NASFAA's communications team, in conjunction with the Policy and TRA teams has produced an extraordinary number of articles for Today's News, to keep members informed of all student financial aid-related news.

In response to the complexity surrounding CARES Act implementation, NASFAA produced biweekly webinars to help educate our members on the newest guidance.

As information and new guidance continued to be published about the use of CARES Act funds and the flexibilities and waivers provided by ED and Congress, NASFAA created a calendar timeline that tracks all the changes to guidance, as well as a one-stop shop resource page with a FAQ section.

The National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators (NASFAA) is a nonprofit membership organization that represents more than 28,000 financial aid professionals at nearly 3,000 colleges, universities, and career schools across the country. NASFAA member institutions serve nine out of every 10 undergraduates in the United States. Based in Washington, D.C., NASFAA is the only national association with a primary focus on student aid legislation, regulatory analysis, and training for financial aid administrators. For more information, visit www.nasfaa.org.

NASFAA has been in regular communication with the Department of Education throughout the implementation process to ask questions and seek clarification on behalf of our members.

Considered experts on the topic, NASFAA staff have been called on by national and local newspapers as well as higher education-specific publications to provide information on how financial aid has been affected by coronavirus, and to give opinions on ED's rollout of guidance.

NASFAA's communications team, in conjunction with the Policy and TRA teams has produced an extraordinary number of articles for Today's News, to keep members informed of all student financial aid-related news.

In response to the complexity surrounding CARES Act implementation, NASFAA produced biweekly webinars to help educate our members on the newest guidance.

As information and new guidance continued to be published about the use of CARES Act funds and the flexibilities and waivers provided by ED and Congress, NASFAA created a calendar timeline that tracks all the changes to guidance, as well as a one-stop shop resource page with a FAQ section.

The National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators (NASFAA) is a nonprofit membership organization that represents more than 28,000 financial aid professionals at nearly 3,000 colleges, universities, and career schools across the country. NASFAA member institutions serve nine out of every 10 undergraduates in the United States. Based in Washington, D.C., NASFAA is the only national association with a primary focus on student aid legislation, regulatory analysis, and training for financial aid administrators. For more information, visit www.nasfaa.org.

NASFAA has been in regular communication with the Department of Education throughout the implementation process to ask questions and seek clarification on behalf of our members.

Considered experts on the topic, NASFAA staff have been called on by national and local newspapers as well as higher education-specific publications to provide information on how financial aid has been affected by coronavirus, and to give opinions on ED's rollout of guidance.

NASFAA's communications team, in conjunction with the Policy and TRA teams has produced an extraordinary number of articles for Today's News, to keep members informed of all student financial aid-related news.

In response to the complexity surrounding CARES Act implementation, NASFAA produced biweekly webinars to help educate our members on the newest guidance.

As information and new guidance continued to be published about the use of CARES Act funds and the flexibilities and waivers provided by ED and Congress, NASFAA created a calendar timeline that tracks all the changes to guidance, as well as a one-stop shop resource page with a FAQ section.

The National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators (NASFAA) is a nonprofit membership organization that represents more than 28,000 financial aid professionals at nearly 3,000 colleges, universities, and career schools across the country. NASFAA member institutions serve nine out of every 10 undergraduates in the United States. Based in Washington, D.C., NASFAA is the only national association with a primary focus on student aid legislation, regulatory analysis, and training for financial aid administrators. For more information, visit www.nasfaa.org.

NASFAA has been in regular communication with the Department of Education throughout the implementation process to ask questions and seek clarification on behalf of our members.

Considered experts on the topic, NASFAA staff have been called on by national and local newspapers as well as higher education-specific publications to provide information on how financial aid has been affected by coronavirus, and to give opinions on ED's rollout of guidance.

NASFAA's communications team, in conjunction with the Policy and TRA teams has produced an extraordinary number of articles for Today's News, to keep members informed of all student financial aid-related news.

In response to the complexity surrounding CARES Act implementation, NASFAA produced biweekly webinars to help educate our members on the newest guidance.

As information and new guidance continued to be published about the use of CARES Act funds and the flexibilities and waivers provided by ED and Congress, NASFAA created a calendar timeline that tracks all the changes to guidance, as well as a one-stop shop resource page with a FAQ section.

The National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators (NASFAA) is a nonprofit membership organization that represents more than 28,000 financial aid professionals at nearly 3,000 colleges, universities, and career schools across the country. NASFAA member institutions serve nine out of every 10 undergraduates in the United States. Based in Washington, D.C., NASFAA is the only national association with a primary focus on student aid legislation, regulatory analysis, and training for financial aid administrators. For more information, visit www.nasfaa.org.